Re:waste - how Sweden is rethinking resources AN EXHIBITION

An estimated two billion tonnes of municipal waste were generated globally in 2016, and according to projections from the World Bank, this number is expected to increase by 70 percent before 2050.

While people living in high-income countries produce more waste compared to those in low-income nations,, reducing waste is a global crisis that requires all of us to do our part. The exhibition Re-waste toolkit outlines the underlying problems, the steps we all have to take to get out of the situation, and innovations in development and in the market.
